Honor lies in the struggle and

Duty, Honor, Country: those three hallowed words reverently dictate what you ought to be,

Our flag

It flies with the last breath

About the Line

The Three Servicemen statue stands in the National Mall and is a moving representation of our veterans overlooking the Vietnam Wall. I began with the idea of depicting the Three Servicemen, with the flag as a background, for the panel and started researching monuments that signify all branches, wars, and types of people who served in those conflicts. I wanted to choose memorials that would represent men and women soldiers of all races. I then added patriotic military quotes and medals that represent all branches along with several "stars and stripes" designs to complete the American Honor fabric line. My hope is that American Honor would be a way to thank our veterans and something they can be proud of.
